In the Name of Allah, Most Gracious Most Merciful

This is an annual prize awarded by The Sudanese Psychological Society. It was established by a resolution taken in 2003. The launching of the prize dates back to the first conference of the Sudanese Psychological Society under the theme of "National Psychology and the Issues of Peace & Development" held in August, 2003 under the auspices of the President of the Republic and chairmanship of Distinguished Professor Al-Zubair Bashir Taha. The prize is awarded in the name of Professor Malik Badri in recognition to his great contributions in promoting psychology in Sudan and in the Arab and Islamic worlds.

This award is multifaceted. First there is a prize for the best graduate of psychology in Sudan, a prize for the best media coverage in the field of psychology and a prize awarded to the psychologist who submits the best research contributing to psychological knowledge. The main objective of the prize is to encourage and reward young and outstanding psychologists and practitioners by contributing to their ongoing works.

Prize Objectives:

The main objective of this award is to honor Professor Malik Badri and to appreciate his valuable contributions to psychology. Other major objectives include:

1. Discovering talents in the field of psychology and grant them financial and social recognition.
