Letter from the Editor

November 2020

Dear Colleagues,

COVID-19 continues to hold the world's attention and focus during these unprecedented times. The current volume of the Arab Journal of Psychiatry includes several articles in which the mental health effects of the virus are well considered. Important themes are emerging that point to notable areas of required study, such as the neuropsychological sequelae for survivors of the disease and the psychological and psychiatric morbidity experienced by frontline staff.

I encourage you to keep going with your investigations into these burgeoning areas of scientific research and to submit what you discover to the AJP for publication. Together we provide strong representation for the Middle East and North Africa to the rest of the world by showcasing the best possible articles that reflect our knowledge of the impact of war and conflict on our communities; our insights into culture and mental health; and our rich history. I hope you enjoy this latest edition, which reflects the collaborative efforts of many Arab and Western researchers as well as the singular efforts of esteemed colleagues.

Sincerely,

Walid Sarhan
